human security from legal, political and economic interdisciplinary perspectives. T semester-long course introduces a broader conception of 'security', which focuses not or on states and international organizations but also on individuals. The course looks at t thread of human security in the fields of human rights, the law of armed conflict (was economic and social inequality and discrimination, terrorism and cybersecurity amo other relevant topics. The emphasis is on dealing with classical debates on security as w as novel approaches to human security. By examining primary materials and the interaction with contemporary security-related issues and dilemmas, students shall gather competences in reading and applying various sources.	Human Security
Module(s) (StuPo 2012) Elective Advanced Governance I, II, III Elective Year(s) 2,3,4 Max. Enrollment Introduction to Governance Instructor(s) Stoyan Panov (stoyan.panov@ucf.uni-freiburg.de) Seminar Block III (start on April 25): Mon, 16-18h, KG 1108 Thu, 16-18h, KG 1234 Additional dates (replacement of holidays): May 3, Tue, 16-18h, KG 1243 May 24, Tue, 16-18h, KG 1243 Block IV (end on July 14): Mon, 16-18h, FMF 01009 This is a semester-long course. Course starts in Week 3 of the Block III (25.04.) and en in Week 5 of Block IV (14.07.). The Human Security course surveys the various debates, concepts and issues arou human security from legal, political and economic interdisciplinary perspectives. T semester-long course introduces a broader conception of 'security', which focuses not on states and international organizations but also on individuals. The course looks at thread of human security in the fields of human rights, the law of armed conflict (we economic and social inequality and discrimination, terrorism and cybersecurity as w as novel approaches to human security. By examining primary materials and thinteraction with contemporary security-related issues and dilemmas, students shall go competences in reading and applying various sources.	Course Number	00LE62VS-LAS-GO0018		SS 2015/16 - Block III+IV
StuPo 2012 Elective (StuPo 2015) Elective	Study Area(s)	Governance, Electives	Credit Points	3 ECTS (SL) + 3 ECTS (PL)
Prerequisites Introduction to Governance Instructor(s) Stoyan Panov (stoyan.panov@ucf.uni-freiburg.de) Seminar Block III (start on April 25): Mon, 16-18h, KG 1108 Thu, 16-18h, KG 1234 Additional dates (replacement of holidays): May 3, Tue, 16-18h, KG 1243 May 24, Tue, 16-18h, KG 1243 Block IV (end on July 14): Mon, 16-18h, FMF 01009 This is a semester-long course. Course starts in Week 3 of the Block III (25.04.) and en in Week 5 of Block IV (14.07.). The Human Security from legal, political and economic interdisciplinary perspectives. T semester-long course introduces a broader conception of 'security', which focuses not on on states and international organizations but also on individuals. The course looks at thread of human security in the fields of human rights, the law of armed conflict (we economic and social inequality and discrimination, terrorism and cybersecurity amo other relevant topics. The emphasis is on dealing with classical debates on security as w as novel approaches to human security. By examining primary materials and thinteraction with contemporary security-related issues and dilemmas, students shall goompetences in reading and applying various sources.				· '
Instructor(s) Stoyan Panov (stoyan.panov@ucf.uni-freiburg.de) Seminar Block III (start on April 25): Mon, 16-18h, KG 1108 Thu, 16-18h, KG 1234 Additional dates (replacement of holidays): May 3, Tue, 16-18h, KG 1243 May 24, Tue, 16-18h, KG 1243 Block IV (end on July 14): Mon, 16-18h, KG 1108 Thu, 16-18h, FMF 01009 This is a semester-long course. Course starts in Week 3 of the Block III (25.04.) and en in Week 5 of Block IV (14.07.). The Human Security course surveys the various debates, concepts and issues arou human security from legal, political and economic interdisciplinary perspectives. T semester-long course introduces a broader conception of 'security', which focuses not or on states and international organizations but also on individuals. The course looks at thread of human security in the fields of human rights, the law of armed conflict (we economic and social inequality and discrimination, terrorism and cybersecurity amo other relevant topics. The emphasis is on dealing with classical debates on security as w as novel approaches to human security. By examining primary materials and the interaction with contemporary security-related issues and dilemmas, students shall go competences in reading and applying various sources.	•	Year(s) 2,3,4		16
Seminar Block III (start on April 25): Mon, 16-18h, KG 1108 Thu, 16-18h, KG 1234 Additional dates (replacement of holidays): May 3, Tue, 16-18h, KG 1243 May 24, Tue, 16-18h, KG 1243 Block IV (end on July 14): Mon, 16-18h, KG 1108 Thu, 16-18h, FMF 01009 This is a semester-long course. Course starts in Week 3 of the Block III (25.04.) and en in Week 5 of Block IV (14.07.). The Human Security course surveys the various debates, concepts and issues arou human security from legal, political and economic interdisciplinary perspectives. T semester-long course introduces a broader conception of 'security', which focuses not on states and international organizations but also on individuals. The course looks at t thread of human security in the fields of human rights, the law of armed conflict (we economic and social inequality and discrimination, terrorism and cybersecurity amo other relevant topics. The emphasis is on dealing with classical debates on security as a sovel approaches to human security. By examining primary materials and the interaction with contemporary security-related issues and dilemmas, students shall go competences in reading and applying various sources.	Prerequisites	Introduction to Governance
Block III (start on April 25): Mon, 16-18h, KG 1108 Thu, 16-18h, KG 1234 Additional dates (replacement of holidays): May 3, Tue, 16-18h, KG 1243 May 24, Tue, 16-18h, KG 1243 Block IV (end on July 14): Mon, 16-18h, KG 1108 Thu, 16-18h, FMF 01009 This is a semester-long course. Course starts in Week 3 of the Block III (25.04.) and en in Week 5 of Block IV (14.07.). The Human Security course surveys the various debates, concepts and issues arou human security from legal, political and economic interdisciplinary perspectives. T semester-long course introduces a broader conception of 'security', which focuses not or on states and international organizations but also on individuals. The course looks at thread of human security in the fields of human rights, the law of armed conflict (we economic and social inequality and discrimination, terrorism and cybersecurity amo other relevant topics. The emphasis is on dealing with classical debates on security as w as novel approaches to human security. By examining primary materials and the interaction with contemporary security-related issues and dilemmas, students shall gat competences in reading and applying various sources.	Instructor(s)	Stoyan Panov (stoyan.panov@ucf.uni-freiburg.de) in Week 5 of Block IV (14.07.). The Human Security course surveys the various debates, concepts and issues arou human security from legal, political and economic interdisciplinary perspectives. T semester-long course introduces a broader conception of 'security', which focuses not or on states and international organizations but also on individuals. The course looks at t thread of human security in the fields of human rights, the law of armed conflict (was economic and social inequality and discrimination, terrorism and cybersecurity amo other relevant topics. The emphasis is on dealing with classical debates on security as w as novel approaches to human security. By examining primary materials and the interaction with contemporary security-related issues and dilemmas, students shall gas competences in reading and applying various sources.		Block III (start on April 25): Mon, 16-18h, KG 1108 Thu, 16-18h, KG 1234 Additional dates (replacement of holidays): May 3, Tue, 16-18h, KG 1243 May 24, Tue, 16-18h, KG 1243 Block IV (end on July 14): Mon, 16-18h, KG 1108 techniques and paradigms of security by focusing on the human rights origins of hum security. Part II deals with in-depth security-related topics and problems such as soci economic and gender-based inequality, vulnerability and discrimination. Part III centers recent practical issues in Human Security such as international intervention Responsibility to Protect, migration, terrorism and cybersecurity. Guest lecturers will tal active part in teaching the relevant topics. The course will employ concrete examples, case studies and interactive exercises in ord to contextualize the approaches and tools, and highlight linkages between theory a practice. Students will be required to submit one mini-review/discussion essay/paper (1500-20 words) on an assigned topic. Students will be required to submit a proposal and research paper or a paper analysing case study/problem and recommendation of solutions on a topic related to human securit Students may be required to participate in group activities and presentation projects. The class will be highly interactive. Attendance and engaged participation is essential be		The Human Security course surveys the various debates, concepts and issues around human security from legal, political and economic interdisciplinary perspectives. The semester-long course introduces a broader conception of 'security', which focuses not only on states and international organizations but also on individuals. The course looks at the thread of human security in the fields of human rights, the law of armed conflict (war), economic and social inequality and discrimination, terrorism and cybersecurity among other relevant topics. The emphasis is on dealing with classical debates on security as well as novel approaches to human security. By examining primary materials and their interaction with contemporary security-related issues and dilemmas, students shall gain competences in reading and applying various sources. The class will be divided in several parts. Part I of the course deals with foundational techniques and paradigms of security by focusing on the human rights origins of human security. Part II deals with in-depth security-related topics and problems such as social, economic and gender-based inequality, vulnerability and discrimination. Part III centers on recent practical issues in Human Security such as international interventions, Responsibility to Protect, migration, terrorism and cybersecurity. Guest lecturers will take active part in teaching the relevant topics. The course will employ concrete examples, case studies and interactive exercises in order to contextualize the approaches and tools, and highlight linkages between theory and practice. Students will be required to submit a proposal and research paper or a paper analysing a case study/problem and recommendation of solutions on a topic related to human security. Students may be required to participate in group activities and presentation projects.

KG Kollegialgebäude AU Alte Uni HH Hermann-Herder-Str Ph Peterhof BT Breisacher Tor